

THE DONG-A ILBO.

MAHATMA GANDHI, MAKER OF NEW INDIA.

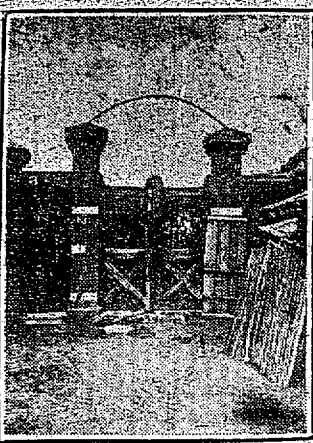

We will have here Romain Rolland's charming description of Gandhi's personal appearance: "Soft dark eyes, a small frail man, with thin face and rather large protruding eyes. He sleeps very little and works incessantly. There is nothing about him except his whole expression of infinite patience and infinite love." There is an almost childlike simplicity about him. His manner is gentle and courteous even when dealing with adversaries and he is of immaculate sincerity. He is modest and unassuming to the point of sometimes seeming almost timid, hesitant in making an assertion. Yet you feel his indomitable spirit. He makes no compromises and never tries to hide a mistake. Nor is he afraid to admit having been in the wrong.

Boycotting British goods and urging Indians to return to the spinning wheels are among his more recent actions. They have incurred for him adverse criticisms even from some of the noted Indian nationalists. But in a land like India of plentiful labour and of few necessities of life, required for the most of the native population, such a course may be more commendable and assured of success in a larger measure than in any other subjugated country.

Whatever weak points and failings his detractors may be able to detect in him, Gandhi is, after all, too big a soul to be hemmed in by political calculations. He is not a character to be judged by the same criterion with which we are accustomed to criticize Lloyd Georges and Clemenceaus. He has more to give to the world than they. He is a spirit that will not pass away. With the lesson of rectitude and righteousness he teaches us, we may help create moral and spiritual atmosphere in which Capitalism and Ultra-socialism, two ungainly offspring of mere Materialism, can possibly be brought to repentance, in mutual understanding. Thus we find in Mahatma Gandhi our common asset and inheritance. When he is rightly understood the Britons will be the gainers no less than the Hindoos.

Owing to some unavoidable circumstances, this article has been interrupted. The article on "France and Korea" will be continued from to-morrow's issue. —Editor.
